

WHAT IS THY BELOVED MORE THAN ANOTHER? 7

COLOSSIANS 1:15

15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature:

COLOSSIANS 1:16

16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him:

COLOSSIANS 1:17

17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

REVELATION 4:11

JOB 38:29

29 Out of whose womb came the ice? and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it?

PSALM 147:17

17 He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before his cold?

Ice crystals are solid ice exhibiting atomic ordering on various length scales and include hexagonal columns, hexagonal plates, dendritic crystals, and diamond dust.

The hugely symmetric shapes are due to depositional growth, namely, direct deposition of water vapour onto the ice crystal.

Depending on environmental temperature and humidity, ice crystals can develop from the initial hexagonal prism into numerous symmetric shapes.

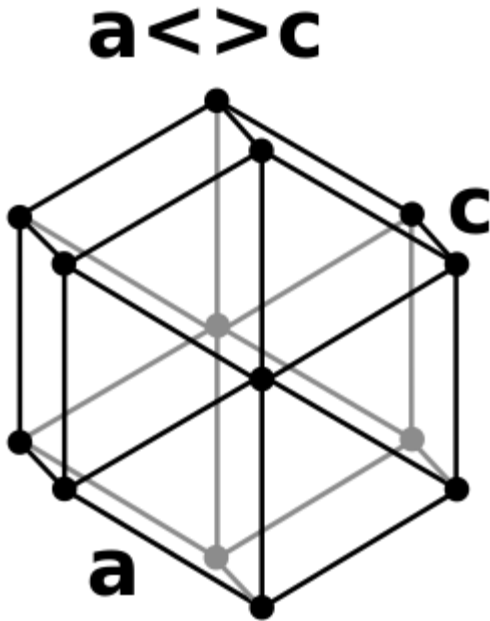

Possible shapes for ice crystals are columns, needles, plates and dendrites.

If the crystal migrates into regions with different environmental conditions, the growth pattern may change, and the final crystal may show mixed patterns.

Ice crystals tend to fall with their major axis aligned along the horizontal, and are thus visible in polarimetric weather radar signatures with enhanced (positive) differential reflectivity values.

Ice clouds are composed of ice crystals, the most notable being cirrus clouds and ice fog.

At ambient temperature and pressure, water molecules have a V shape. The two hydrogen atoms bond to the oxygen atom at a 105° angle.

Common ice crystals are symmetrical and have a hexagonal pattern.

JOB 38:29

29 Out of whose womb came the ice? and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it?

JOB 37:10

10 By the breath of God frost is given: and the breadth of the waters is straitened.

PSALM 147:16

16 He giveth snow like wool: he scattereth the hoarfrost like ashes.

According to the National Weather Service, the Old English dictionary (c. 1290) defines hoarfrost as "expressing the resemblance of white feathers of frost to an old man's beard."

First, to produce any frost, you need water vapor (gaseous form of water) in the air over cold ground with a surface dew point at least as cold as 32 degrees.

When these water vapor molecules contact a subfreezing surface, such as a blade of grass, they jump directly from the gas state to solid state, a process known as "deposition", leading to a coating of tiny ice crystals.

So what provides the boost for frost to grow into hoarfrost like this?

Generally speaking, you want a much more moist air mass in place. In late fall, winter or early spring, one or more days in a row of freezing fog (fog with air temperatures of 32 degrees or colder) is a perfect scenario.

With more moisture in the air, the interlocking crystal patterns of frost become more intricate and much larger, building up to a greater depth on tree branches, signs, fences, anything. This is hoarfrost.

If there is a light wind, the hoarfrost can accumulate on the downwind side of objects.
